Interactive Performance Training

Who should attend?

Projects Managers(PM) at all levels of experience. Although the course is aimed primarily at PMs, it focusses on ways to improve and maintain the multiple everyday interactions that are the 'essential' oils needed by all PMs to ensure the smooth running of project machinery.

What are the objectives?

We will help to equip you with the necessary behavioural and communication skills to assist you with your everyday personal interactions that are key to you achieving more successful outcomes.

What is the methodology?

The concept is based on case studies of real world scenarios that PMs face throughout all organisations globally, but can also be tailored to your own personal experiences. The real case studies use a well-established industry method of forum theatre and involves the use of experienced, business-trained actors, who can help to create realistic situations and provide objective feedback about your interactions.

Agenda

AGENDA

In addition to using real case scenarios pertinent to PMS, the course will concentrate on the everyday behavioural and communication interactions that are an important part of the PMs and look at the skills needed to improve those interactions. All of us have some of those skills already -listening, body language, open questioning, bridging language – but we don't use them correctly or enough. This course aims to help you to build those skills and improve that balance.
